Course Description: This is a three credit introductory course in macroeconomics, the theory of the economy in the aggregate. This course deals with the issues of unemployment, stable prices and economic growth. The student who completes both macroeconomic and microeconomic principles can expect to gain an understanding of our economic system, which will permit critical analysis of many of the important issues of our day.

Statement of Prerequisites: There are no prerequisites, but knowledge of graphing and coordinate geometry would be helpful.

General Objectives: The student will gain an understanding of the economic system, and the ability to analyze macroeconomic issues.

Specific Objectives: See attached course outline.

Outcomes: You will be evaluated on your understanding of economics through your performance on written examinations and on performance on pretest and posttest outcomes questions.

Methodology: Lectures, with opportunity for in-class questions and discussion.

Evaluation Criteria: The course grade is based on three hour exams, three quizzes, five homework assignments, and one comprehensive final. Each of the hour exams, as well as the quiz average, counts for 20% of the final grade. The lowest of these four grades will be dropped. In addition, homework will be collected and will count for 10% of the final grade, and the final exam will count for 30% of the final grade.

Regular class attendance is expected, but not required. Your course grade is not explicitly based on the number of classes attended. However, attendance is required on the following exam dates, as makeup exams are only given in extraordinary circumstances (e.g. you are seriously ill). So plan your schedule now so that these dates are available.
Exam Dates:

First exam: Thursday, September 28, 2006
Second exam: Tuesday, October 31, 2006
Third exam: Thursday, December 7, 2006

The dates for each of the three quizzes (10-15 minutes each) will be announced on the previous class period, and attendance is required for these also. So if you miss a class, check about possible upcoming quizzes through me or through the grapevine. The final will be held in this classroom. The time of the final will be announced later.

Homework: Five homework assignments will be given during the course of the semester. They will be collected and graded, and they will only help you learn the material if you work these assignments before they are reviewed in class. All homework must be submitted by Friday, December 8, 2006, in order to receive credit.

Required Texts, Readings, Materials:

In addition, brief outside readings may be assigned from time to time from current periodicals.

Last Date to Change to Audit Status or Withdraw with a W Grade: Friday, November 3, 2006
